"CORRECT DRESS FOR WOMEN"

If a man can write a better letter, or make a better mousetrap than his neighbor, he build his house in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door. The Saxon-Heard-Williams Co. has almost beaten the world.—'twas founded in Dothan while the greater part of the present Dothan was woods. They have built a "beaten path" so good—so much better in the primary store, that the people of Southeast Alabama Southwest Georgia and West Florida have made a "beaten path" to our door. Our motto was to hold on the rock of quality. It's quality first here, then price—no price, but that one price as low as like quality can be purchased anywhere in America.

Our exhibition of ready-to-wear apparel is gathered from the best of New York's manufacturers. Our makers keep in touch with European fashion centers at all times. You can have the inner consciousness of being correctly dressed if you buy here. No woman can have the self-poise absolutely necessary at all functions unless her gown be well fitting and in the seasons latest fashion.

All wool one piece dresses from $10.00 to $47.50.

All wool suits start at $12.50, $15.50, $18.50, $22.50, $25.50, $27.50, $32.50 and up to $48.50.

We confidently assert that our one price marked in plain figures, is lower than like merchandise can be purchased in any city any where.

Growth, a Southern Industry.

The growth of the cities of the South, as shown in the returns now nearly complete of the 1910 census, is a striking evidence of the fact that they are doing better now on the other side of Mason and Dixon's line than at any time since the Civil War. The Southern municipalities have taken into line away up near the head of the great uplift procession of American cities. Neither the industrial enterprise of New England nor the agricultural prosperity of the West has earned a rank nearer to the forefront of the column, where the sweet music of success hits rhythms for the ambitious pace.

To begin with, behold Birmingham, Ala., treading fairly on the heels of the big bass drum. No city of Birmingham's class approached its record. There is only one Birmingham, only one place of over 100,000 that scored as high an increase in population as 245 per cent. Oklahoma City and Muskogee, those new and therefore popular habitations of man, did indeed grow to the extent of something like 500 per cent, apiece, but neither of them approaches the 100,000 mark in population, while Birmingham is credited with 132,685 souls.

Three other Southern cities rank among the nine municipalities of 25,000 or over which show an increase of over 100 per cent, in population for the decade. The three are Fort Worth, Tex., whose 73,312 form an increase of 174 per cent, for the decade; Dallas, Tex., with 92,104 in 1910 and 116 per cent, increase, and Jacksonville, Fla., whose present 57,699 comprise an increment of 103 per cent. It is well to bear in mind before committing these temporary figures to memory as final that neither Chattanooga nor Nashville, nor yet Memphis and Louisville, have been heard from.

Atlanta, among the cities over 100,000, has performed prodigies nearly rivaling the population exploits of Birmingham. With 154,839 present population, an increase of 72 per cent in ten years it takes second prize for percentage increase. No other city of over 100,000 has yet reported an increase of over 63 per cent.

Yet, more than in the resounding success of these two leaders, the betterment of the South is displayed in the growth of the more modest places before mentioned, which do not count any hundred thousand within their lesser limits. The South has long been full of spots old in song and story, like the snowy summits of the poem and quite as much disassociated from business and material progress. One used on average years, what would be to invariably feel a shock of surprise, on looking up the population of some well known spot on the Southern half of the map, to find it much smaller than it was a few years ago. But now, when we look at all of the South, we find the fulfillment of her ever abundant prospects. New York

They Are Silent

There is always room for improvement, but the way Abbeville and Headland have behaved themselves with reference to the price of cotton in these respective towns this year, tend to show that they have gone the limit. Heretofore, the paper in one or the other of these towns would start something about how much Jim Smith got for cotton a certain day in the home town, and how little Billie Brown got for his in the other town the same day. From that would grow a row that wouldn't ease off till planting time. This year there has not been a line, so far as we have been able to see, from either of those towns telling how little the other was paying for cotton, or how some one was cheated in weights.

Either Jernigan and Grouby are sleeping over their chance to start something, or they have pooled against the common people. It may be the latter. It may be that they have decided that to say too much about the fancy price of cotton, or the shabby price, and short weights, only drives the cotton to Well Station, or Capps, to Columbia or Dothan. Or it may be that the cotton buyers and warehouse keepers have gotten together.

Something has changed, anyway.

Sugar cane is getting sweeter and taller every day, and the potatoes are a sight for sore eyes and an empty stomach; cotton is worth a satisfactory price and we have corn to take care of the county and some to spare; hogs enough to pork the county and the towns. Good roads are being built over the county and farm lands are not for sale, unless you want to give more than you think it is worth. Labor has been fairly plentiful in the country, and the farmer can either buy a $500 pair of mules or a runabout. He buys the mules, in most instances. So taking it altogether, what are we kicking about. Anybody kicking?

The fire whistle has again been silenced, that the populace might not miss an exhaust from the oil mill gas engine. The fire whistle only had an opportunity to pull itself once or twice a month, and it stood no show, not the least bit, as a noise creator, by the side of the gas engine exhaust, so his honor gave orders that the whistle be laid away for the present. It is said that the mayor has never refused a request of his mother's, and there is a plot on foot to have her intercede, to call him up over the phone and give some orders about the nuisance.

A judge of Alabama is of the opinion that state has no business making money from the hire of convicts. If we should lease them out for just enough to break even Hugh Smith was looking down on the street from Dell & Smith's office yesterday and saw a sight that stumped him. It was a man walking up the street carrying a woman in his arms, so far as his vision was able to tell. He called quickly for Dell to come and see. He thought an accident must have happened. Dell, being somewhat older and slightly far-sighted, first looked with eager interest, and then a smile began to ripple across the landscape of his face, for he discovered that Whaley's millinery store was being moved and this was only the dummy figure of a woman, the kind that are placed in the windows, or just inside the doors, to show the ladies how perfect certain well known garments fit the figure, or make the clothes fit the garment.

Since our earliest recollections we have seen in the country weeklies and under correspondent's article, such items as: "Our Mr. John Brown made a flying visit to Jayville, one day last week." Within a year or two more this will be literally correct, for the aeroplanes will be in general use, and John is just as liable to go visiting on an aeroplane as not.

There has been a quiet rumor for some days that a circus was coming to Dothan. It is entirely unofficial, and we believe groundless, although it is reported that a contract has been made with the Coast Line to handle the show train. We have made safe inquiries, and have not found one single boy who knew anything about the circus. We know there must be a mistake.

Nothing since Hobson's feat with the Merrimac has given Alabama the advertising that Birmingham's census has. Every town in the state should feel proud of Birmingham's population, even if it is a little mixed, for it's through Birmingham that the eyes of the world are turned to Alabama and the South.

This country would have 139,000,078 if the towns all showed up with as many people as they expect. There is a sad disappointment in store for many struggling bargs, but the consolation is that the information is broken gently and slowly, and it oughtn't to shock anybody.

We have comparatively few editors in Alabama who part their names in the middle, with accent on the second name.

With the approach of cold weather clothing people will find sales making up.

The first touch of fall, this morning, and it never touched enough to hurt.

Tom Gilliam Jumps From a Moving Train After Being Target for Bullets and Disappeared in Woods

Greenville, Ala., Oct. 10.—Tom Gilliam, a negro ported of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad jumped off train No. 6, north-bound, near Bolling, seven miles south of here this afternoon, after being shot at by the white flagman of the train. Gilliam was last seen running across a field, and it is thought he was struck by the bullet.

Gilliam left Montgomery on train No. 3, last night, coming south. He was in a drunken condition and the conductor had put him off at this place. He worked his way to Bolling this morning and this afternoon caught No. 6, to come to Montgomery. When the flagman passed through the negro coach on his way to the baggage car, Gilliam and two other negroes followed him. The flagman grabbed for his pistol, which was in a chest in the baggage car and turned back to face the negroes. Gilliam is said to when the flagman saw it, he opened fire on him. Gilliam dashed back through the negro coach to the rear platform and jumped off, one of the other members of the trio following him. In jumping off the train, Gilliam pulled a negro passenger, Sam Taylor, off with him to the ground, but he was not hurt.

After alighting, Gilliam was seen to make a hasty retreat across a cotton field and disappeared.

DOTHAN'S GROWTH PLAINLY VISIBLE

Dothan's growth is not altogether unlike the famous comet of a few months ago, it being at first a bit hard to set, but as time passes, it grows clearly visible to the naked eye and stands out prominently among the "stars" of the Southeast Alabama "heavens."

With all of the business section of town paved, an underground telephone system, every sidewalk in town of any note paved and curbed, a new high school building and a government building that will cost Uncle Sam a cool hundred thousand dollars, all being done at the same time in a town the size of Dothan, cannot be other than attractive and noticeable to this section of the country.

The underground wires of the telephone company are being laid, the high school building will be ready for pupils at the beginning of the next term, the government building is almost completed, the streets paved, with the exception of Foster and the northern end of St. Andrews, the sidewalk pavers working full time on North Foster street and a new set of contractors on the cross streets, new buildings going up all over town and many other things being done here at the same time, go to show that it's a little Birmingham with out any annexes.

But this is not the first time in the history of Dothan that it has grown. It has always grown, but never has there been such a boom. It is not expected to fade away like the comet did, but instead, the contractors who have so many building jobs ahead can vouch for the continuous growth of this place.

It was started later than nearly all the little places in Southeast Alabama but has outgrown them. A few years ago it passed from the little "burg" stage into a town and is now being transformed from the town of Dothan to a bustling little city, "Dothan the Queen of the wiregrass."

Greenville, Ala., Oct. 10.—News reached here today of the killing yesterday of Lewis Crenshaw by his brother-in-law, Sam Crenshaw. It seems that Lewis Crenshaw went into the cane patch of Sam, and when he came out found Sam waiting for him. In the dispute that followed Sam knocked Lewis down with his gun and then shot him through the head.

The killing occurred at Cedar Creek yesterday about 5 o'clock. Cedar Creek is about fourteen miles west of Greenville. Crenshaw is still at large.
